Subject: A 50-State Analysis of Medicaid Benefit Coverage for Children without EPSDT

As requested, we analyzed limits on the amount, duration, and scope of Medicaid coverage that would be available to children in 50 states¹ if the Early and Periodic Screening, Diagnosis, and Treatment (EPSDT) benefit requirement was eliminated and states applied the coverage policies currently in effect for categorically needy adults. EPSDT requires that children be provided all federally allowable Medicaid treatment services determined to be medically necessary to correct or ameliorate an identified problem or condition.²

We examined 12 benefits of particular importance to children with chronic physical and developmental conditions.³ Three are mandatory services: physician services, inpatient hospital services, and outpatient hospital services. Nine are optional services: prescription drugs, physical therapy, occupational therapy, speech therapy, private duty nursing, personal care services, home health care services, durable medical equipment, and disposable medical supplies.

¹ Oregon was excluded from the analysis because its benefits are in the form of condition-treatment pairs and cannot be compared to the benefit coverage policies of the other states. The District of Columbia is included as a state.

² EPSDT does not, however, automatically override every benefit restriction. It does not obligate states to lift mandatory generic drug substitution requirements, for example. Nor does it require them to cover a particular type of service, such as physical therapy, as a hospital outpatient service, clinic service, and independent practitioner service, provided that the service is otherwise reasonably accessible and available to the child.

Our analysis was based on a review of coverage descriptions found in each state's Medicaid state plan and state plan amendments, current as of April 2005. It should be noted, however, that these documents vary considerably from state to state with respect to the specificity of benefit descriptions. For certain benefits -- most notably medical supplies and durable medical equipment -- detailed information may be found only in provider and billing manuals.

Below we provide a summary of our findings. In addition, state information is provided in Attachment 1.

Major Findings

1. Of the 50 states we studied, we found that without EPSDT, all would restrict or omit coverage for certain services needed by children with serious physical and developmental conditions.
 - Mandatory services are covered without limits by the vast majority of states. However, about a quarter of states impose visit or day limits on physician, inpatient hospital, or outpatient hospital services.
 - ✓ Fourteen states impose visit limits on physician services, and in half of these states visits are limited to fewer than 15 per year.
 - ✓ Eleven states restrict the number of inpatient hospital days per year or per admission, with one state restricting coverage to 12 days per year.
 - ✓ Twelve states limit coverage of hospital outpatient services, including one state that imposes a $1,500 annual cap and six others that limit the number of visits to fewer than 15 per year.
 - Coverage of optional Medicaid services, which enable many children with chronic and disabling conditions to receive specialized therapeutic services required for habilitation, rehabilitation, and maintenance, is far more variable.
 - ✓ Twenty-nine states fail to provide any coverage for private duty nursing.⁴
 - ✓ Twenty-two states fail to cover personal care.

⁴ Private duty nursing services are usually provided in shifts and are intended for patients who require continuous care.

- ✓ Twenty-three states provide no coverage for physical therapy furnished by independent practitioners, a particularly important benefit when coverage for hospital outpatient services is limited or travel times to hospital outpatient facilities are unreasonable. Of those that do, six states impose annual visit limits of 50 or fewer -- in one state 15 per year, in two states 20 per year, and in one state 40 per year in combination with occupational therapy and speech-language pathology services.
- ✓ Thirty-one states provide no coverage for occupational therapy furnished by independent practitioners. Of those that do, four cap visit limits at 50 or fewer -- with three states restricting the number of visits to 20 visits per year and one state to 40 visits per year in combination with physical therapy and speech-language pathology services.
- ✓ Thirty states fail to provide any coverage for speech-language pathology services furnished by independent practitioners. Of those that do, two states limit visits to 50 or fewer per year -- with one state restricting visits to 30 per year and another to 40 per year in combination with physical and occupational therapy services.
- ✓ All states cover home health services, but not all include coverage for ancillary therapies: three states fail to cover physical therapy, six fail to cover occupational therapy, and seven fail to cover speech-language pathology services. In addition, 17 impose visit limits on nursing services and 18 impose visit limits on home health aide services, while 10 or more impose visit limits on the ancillary therapies. Limits of 50 or fewer visits are applied to nursing services and to home health aide services in two states. The same limits are applied to nursing and home health aide services combined in two states, to ancillary therapies combined in one state, and to all home health services in another.
- ✓ All states cover prescription drugs, but 20 states use a preferred drug list. In addition, four states limit coverage to between three and six prescriptions per month.
- ✓ With respect to specific types of durable medical equipment, 13 of the 32 states that articulate their policies in state plan documents fail to cover hearing aids and an additional four states limit coverage for hearing aid replacements to every three to five years. Of the states for which we could obtain plan information, five of the 39 fail to cover prosthetics, four of the 21 fail to cover orthotics, and one of the 10 limits the number of wheelchairs to one every five years.

2. Moreover, even when benefits are provided, the 50 states frequently impose condition or treatment exclusions that ignore children's unique needs for preventive and habilitative interventions. These exclusions would have the greatest impact on children with congenital anomalies and developmental conditions.
 - ✓ Of the 21 states covering private duty nursing, three impose significant restrictions, such as ventilator dependency, and one provides coverage only for inpatient care, which could preclude coverage for children with cancer or other serious medical conditions.
 - ✓ Of the 28 states covering personal care, one severely restricts coverage by requiring that the services be provided only in lieu of hospitalization, which probably would not be necessary for children with cerebral palsy or other developmental disabilities who might require personal care.
 - ✓ Of the 27 states covering physical therapy services furnished by independent practitioners, the 20 states covering speech-language pathology services furnished by independent practitioners, and the 19 states covering occupational therapy services furnished by independent practitioners, a proportion only make coverage available for restorative or rehabilitative purposes. For physical therapy, for example, eight states provide coverage only for restorative purposes and three only for rehabilitative purposes. Children with neuromuscular conditions, such as spina bifida or muscular dystrophy, and those with serious hearing problems or developmental delays could be among those who might be unable to obtain coverage for needed ancillary therapies if rehabilitative requirements are narrowly imposed.
 - ✓ Of the 50 states covering home health care, six restrict nursing and home health aide services to those who require treatment for an illness or injury; five allow coverage only in lieu of hospitalization; and one allows coverage only to facilitate transition from a more acute level of care. These restrictions potentially deny benefits to children who are not able to participate in home- and community-based waivers but have neurodevelopmental disabilities, such as autism disorder or cerebral palsy with paraplegia.
 - ✓ Of the 10 state plans with information about coverage for wheelchairs, one limits coverage only to individuals who are confined to a chair or bed.

3. All states would limit access to certain services needed by children with serious physical and developmental conditions. However, we found that in seven of the 50 states -- Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, Oklahoma, and South Carolina -- children with chronic physical or disabling conditions would face very significant coverage gaps if EPSDT was eliminated.
- ✓ Alabama -- where physician services together with hospital outpatient department services would be limited to 14 visits per year; inpatient hospital services would be limited to 16 visits; and physical therapy, occupational therapy, and speech-language pathology services furnished by independent therapists would not be covered.
 - ✓ Arkansas -- where physician services and hospital outpatient services would each be limited to 12 visits per year; physical therapy, occupational therapy, and speech-language pathology services furnished by independent therapists would not be covered; occupational therapy and speech-language pathology services would not be covered as a home health benefit; private duty nursing would be covered only for those who are ventilator dependent; prescription drugs would be limited to six per month; and hearing aids would not be covered at all.
 - ✓ Florida -- where hospital outpatient services would be covered only up to $1,500 per year; physical therapy, occupational therapy, and speech-language pathology services furnished by independent practitioners would not be covered; the ancillary therapies also would not be covered under the home health benefit; private duty nursing would not be covered; prosthetics would not be covered; and hearing aids would be available only every three years.
 - ✓ Louisiana -- where physician services together with hospital outpatient services would be capped at 12 visits per year; physical therapy, occupational therapy, and speech-language pathology services would not be covered; private duty nursing and personal care services would not be covered; and home health nursing and home health aide services together would be restricted to 50 visits per year and only available for restorative treatment following an illness or injury.
 - ✓ Mississippi -- where physician services in combination with hospital outpatient department services would be restricted to 12 visits per year; physical therapy, occupational therapy, and speech-language pathology services furnished by independent practitioners would not be covered; occupational therapy would not be covered under the home health benefit; prescription drugs would be limited to seven per month; orthotics and prosthetics would not be covered; and home nursing services with home health aide services, and physical and speech therapy would be limited to 50 visits per year.

- ✓ Oklahoma -- where inpatient hospital stays would be limited to 24 days per year; physical therapy, occupational therapy, and speech-language pathology services would not be covered; the ancillary therapies also would not be covered under the home health benefit; and private duty nursing, hearing aids, and prosthetics also would be excluded.
- ✓ South Carolina -- where physician visits would be covered up to 12 visits per year; prescription drugs limited to four per month; physical therapy, occupational therapy, and speech-language pathology services furnished by independent practitioners would not be covered; and both private duty nursing and personal care services also would not be covered.

In summary, absent the EPSDT diagnostic and treatment service mandate, all states to varying degrees would omit or limit coverage for services that are frequently needed by children with serious physical and developmental conditions to achieve their optimal level of health and functional status. The services for which adequate benefits are most likely to be unavailable are private duty nursing services, personal care services, home health care services, and also physical therapy, occupational therapy, and speech-language pathology services furnished by independent practitioners. This is the result not only of benefit exclusions and limits in the amount of coverage, but also of restrictions in the scope of coverage such that benefits are more narrowly constructed for adult purposes and are no longer appropriate to meet the unique needs of children facing serious, often life-long, disease and disability.

Moreover, the analysis reveals the enormous variation in coverage that would be available to children from one state to another. Children in Southern states would face far greater restrictions than children in other states. Clearly, the loss of EPSDT would result in the loss of uniform, comprehensive benefits across states for low-income children.
